

June 19th, 2017

Dear Suits,

Speaking as someone who lived for years in China, the internet without neutrality will resemble the internet in China. It'll be private companies putting on anticompetitive pressure, censoring, and spying, instead of the government; but the effects will be the same.

While internet in urban China is in fact vastly superior to the US in every regard but this, I don't think anyone is going to attribute this to the Great Firewall. (A much more likely explanation is the competition enforced by having multiple state-owned ISPs which ain't merging any time soon.)

Anyway, go ahead and give your masters what they want, then welcome to China, pengyou.

Sincerely,

Ian Finnesey

p.s.: Go die.